ARREST SIX; ALL FINED

Patrolmen Wage Campaign at
"Stop" Sign Locations
Near Here

Six motorists fell into the hands of highway patrolmen for failing to stop at a "Stop" sign, a woman was arrested for driving without a license and two youths were arrested for driving a truck without the consent of the owner yesterday. Three men and six women were injured in week-end accidents.

The two youths in a spirit of daring drove off in the truck of George P. Anthony, 2311 E. Susquehanna avenue, Philadelphia, yesterday afternoon, between 5:30 and six o'clock.

The Anthony truck was driven from Philadelphia to Maple Shade yesterday afternoon by his son, James P. Anthony, 19. Anthony brought along three of his friends. The boys stopped the truck along the Nesaminy Creek at Newportville Road and Maple avenue. Anthony and one of his pals went down along the creek and left James Macklin, 16, 2213 East Gordon street and Herbert Mulholland, 18, 623 East Thompson street, in the truck. As soon as Anthony and his chum were out of sight, Macklin started the car. Anthony heard the truck start and called back, he says, "don't touch it." But the youthful driver continued to operate the truck until he crashed into a new sedan. He had only driven about 50 feet. The sedan was owned by James J. Devlin, 1736 E. Brill street, Philadelphia. Devlin was in the back seat with his wife while Mr. and Mrs. James H. Mason occupied the front seat with Mr. Mason driving.

Mr. Devlin has a fractured wrist and injuries about the face. Mrs. Devlin is suffering from shock, has injuries of the face and possibly a fracture of the hip. Both are in the Harriman Hospital.

Constable Joseph Seader arrested Macklin for driving without a license and he will be given a hearing later today.

Those to fall into the hands of patrolmen for failing to stop at a "stop" sign were given hearings before Justice of Peace, Edward Lynn. Each was fined $10 and costs.

George H. Haefer, George Herman, Frank Urbanski, Marion B. Russell, James McDonnell and John J. Brabagon, all of Philadelphia.

A Bristol man, Frank Canucci, 1010 Wood street, was injured when struck by an automobile on Bristol Pike, west of the borough, last evening. In company with Dominick Roberto, 349 Lincoln avenue, Canucci was walking along the highway, when it is stated he was struck by a machine operated by Anthony Faizini, Grant avenue, West Trenton, N. J. Canucci was treated at the Harriman Hospital for brush burns of the left leg.

When two automobiles side-swiped on the Lincoln Highway yesterday, four women and one man were injured. The driver of one machine was Adam Semnek, Ford Road, Yardley and the second car was operated by Lewis Moses, 1161 Laylor street, Trenton, N. J. Moses suffered lacerations of the face, and slight injuries were sustained by the following who were riding in his car: Emma Moses (wife of Lewis Moses), bruises about knees, shock; Betty Hirschfeld, Stuyvesant street, Trenton, N. J.; Ida Kesselman, 559 Edgewood street, Trenton; Anna Kesselman, 559 Edgewood street, Trenton, N. J. lacerations of face and shock. The party was treated at the scene of the accident by patrolman Stable of the South Lanarkshire barracks. No arrests were made.

Stepping from a rumble seat of a car on the Lincoln highway early this morning, Miss Dorothy Waters, 19, of 4508 Benner street, Philadelphia, is said to have been struck by an automobile operated by Howard Brenner, 809 N. Shippen street, Lancaster. Brenner was in the act of backing his machine, according to Corporal Evans of the highway patrol. Miss Waters who had just alighted from the car of John W. Kelly, Philadelphia, has lacerations and contusions of the legs. She was treated at Frankford Hospital.

Marguerite Gould, 3117 Belgrade street, Philadelphia, was arrested in Bristol Township yesterday by Patrolman Hand for driving without a license. She was fined $10 and costs by Justice of Peace, James Guy.

MURDERESSES HAVE CHOICE OF WORK IN PRISON NOW MODEL "CITY OF FORGOTTEN WOMEN"

Tehachapi Reformatory Institutes Notable Changes in Its Penal Methods

California's new prison exclusively for women embodies departures in penology that have made it the object of national attention among sociologists, public officials and welfare workers. A staff writer of International News Service obtained the first comprehensive "inside story" of the institution. This is the first of a series concerning her experiences and observations.

By AGNES UNDERWOOD

International News Service Special Correspondent

(Copyright, 1935, International News Service)

TEHACHAPI, Cal., Apr. 29.—(INS)—Nestled in a range of snow covered mountains, eight and one-half miles from the nearest town, is California's home for forgotten women.

Here are Clara Phillips, the celebrated "Hammer Murderess," Louise Peete, Nellie Madison, Josephine Valenti, Anna De Ritas, Burmah White and 140 others who ignored man-made laws and are spending long, long years in a miniature city of their own.

Ruler of this city surrounded by a high wire fence, is Miss Josephine Jackson, Deputy Warden, who works directly under orders from the head of the state prison at San Quentin, Warden James B. Holohan.

For 18 years she has been employed in California prisons, and for 18 years she has been caring for women whom the state has tagged "bad" and sent away to do penance behind prison walls.

Miss Jackson moved the first group of girls from San Quentin into Tehachapi in August, 1933, and by November of the same year all of the inmates of the state prison had been transferred.

Life runs smoothly, and quietly, as the days go by with the only break in a monotonous existence being an occasional visit by some unexpected outsider.

The buildings which comprise the prison group, are an administration building, sewing and laundry building, detention building and two cottages. All work in the prison is volunteer—none compulsory and each inmate is given an opportunity to do the work she likes best.

Many of them prefer garden work, many laundry, many cooking and table serving, many secretarial and some even beauty work.

There is no official chef at the state institution and the inmates have proven themselves splendid cooks even to the extent of making all of the bread that is used by the inmates.

Six a. m. is regulation "get-up" time; nine p. m. lights out.

Work on the various necessary duties is started immediately after breakfast and groups may be seen leaving the various buildings in which they are housed for the rabbitry, the chicken yard, the barn yard where there are several cows to be milked.

And, as groups gather around electric washing machines, or in the yard planting trees, or in the chicken yard, tending the fowls, loud shouts of laughter may be heard ringing through the echoing mountainous section.

No supervisor stands over these 145 women to drive them to their tasks. No one waits around to scold or correct them. They are on an honor

BASEBALL SEASON OPENS ON LOCAL DIAMONDS

Bristol A. A., Edgely and Hibernians All Lose
Contests

GOOD SIZED CROWDS

Bristol A. A. did not fare so well in its opening contest of the baseball season played yesterday afternoon on Leedom's field. The Bristolians were swamped by the All-Saints, of Burlington, 11-4, in a one-sided contest.

The All-Saints made a total of fourteen hits while the A. A. could only muster eight. It was the fourth, fifth, sixth, and eighth innings which brought disaster to the Bristol pitchers.

"Charlie" Whyno was the only A. A. hurler who could show any stuff to the visiting clan. Whyno hooked his curve over the plate for three frames and held the Jerseyites scoreless and gave up but one hit.

"Al" Pitkoe was the hitting star of the game, connecting for two doubles and two triples and scoring four runs.

On the Edgely diamond, the Edgely Braves rallied in the closing cantos but not enough to overcome the early lead of the Roebeling Holy Name Club and so dropped the decision to the across the river foes, 9-7.

The Braves counted five times in the last two innings but the Jerseyites, starting off with a four-run edge were too far in the van to be frightened by the Edgely spurts. The Braves outlived the winners, fourteen to eleven.

"Johnny" Harnsen started for Edgely and retired before the first inning was over. He was relieved by "Mel" Wright who finished the fray. "Billy" Rink was quite effective in the pinches for the Roebeling team.

The Hibernians' opening against the Hulmeville A. A. team was spoiled by Manager Howard Black, Black with one out in the final inning slammed a double to score two runs which gave Hulmeville a close 8-7 win.

PARADE PRATTLE

The sixth ward group lost out on the "eats" Saturday when the supply was exhausted, except for the ice cream. A portion of the fifth ward also was disappointed.

1700 sandwiches were served Saturday to those in the parade.

Keystone Dairy generously gave the committee 360 quarts of milk which was a welcomed beverage to the boys and girls at the end of their parade route.

Croydon made the best showing ever made by this group and if as much improvement is made next year should win a prize.

Ward leaders of the fifth ward near the end of the parade route carried two tots on the lead for the balance of the distance. The youngsters were "all in."

There were roller skates, bicycles, motor cycles and other forms of conveyance used by the paraders.

The stiff wind which blew was hard on the costumes, and many of the paper hats and shoulder bands were ruined at the beginning of the march.

St. Francis Industrial School had 150 youths in line. There were 40 in the band and 110 in the military unit. They made a fine showing and added much to the parade.

One fair young woman, accompanied by a small boy, was much surprised after standing by the judges' stand for about five minutes, to find the parade had passed 15 minutes previous.

She had counted herself fortunate on finding a parking place, not realizing that many spectators had "pulled out" some time previous.

Bristol Riding Club Places Third at Show

Bristol Riding Club placed third yesterday at the Spring horse show held by the Yardley Riding and Driving Club at Yardley. There were 2,000 spectators present. The meet was won by the Kellogg stables while New Hope finished second.

One of the features of the show from a spectator standpoint, was the flat race on a course of about six furlongs. Dreadnought, owned by the Juppins' Jack Farm, won by a length over Culver McWilliams, owned by Mrs. C. Allen Gwynne, of New Hope, with Buddy, owned by C. Frank Donnelly, of Bristol, third. Six horses ran in the event.

For the first time in the show, a Kellogg horse had to be content with second when White Boots, owned by Dr. E. J. Laing, of Bristol, was declared the winner in the ladies' hunters class, ladies to ride. Chesapeake Bay was second with Ginger, owned by Mrs. James Harley Nash, of New York city, third, and Nora, of The Horses, at New Hope, fourth.

In the opening event of the program, which lasted all afternoon, Me Too, owned by F. Jane Smith, of Newtown, was the victor. The event was for saddle ponies under 46 inches. Howard Morris' Babe took second with Flossie, of Charles Dietrich, of Bristol, third.

Second Honors Go To Sixth
Ward Girls and Edgely
Boys

Continuing to "show its colors" with a large number of children in the line of march, fifth ward again captured first honors on Saturday afternoon for the largest delegation in the Youth Week parade. The total entered for this ward was 322, eleven less than last year. To the fifth ward winners there will be presented a banner.

Bristol, Croydon and Edgely boys and girls turned out en masse at 1:15 to take part in this annual event which officially opens the week for Youth.

Four prizes were awarded by the judges for appearance, first prize for girls going to Edgely, and second to the sixth ward girls. For the boys' contingents, fourth ward received first honors for best appearance, and Edgely boys made the second place prize. The first prizes in each instance will be large cups, and second prizes medals. During the parade of 1934 the boys of Edgely won first place, and the girls of the fourth ward. The judges, who viewed the parade from Mill and Wood streets, were: Mrs. Frank Lehman, Mrs. Albert Dowden, Mrs. A. Gonzales; Messrs. Asa Fabian, Paul V. Forster, Paul Barrett.

Walter F. Leedom served as marshal of the parade, being accompanied in the automobile by his granddaughter, Miss Charlotte Cadwallader, Yardley; and his grandson, Walter Cadwallader, Superintendent of public safety James L. McGee, and chief of police Linford J. Jones, riding in the fire chief's car, acted as the borough's official escort.

The total in line was 1544, a lead of 94 over the number for last year. The districts placed as follows: Fifth ward, 322; Croydon, 270; fourth ward, 264; sixth ward, 190; first ward, 136; Edgely, 126; second ward, 125; third ward, 111.

Following the marshal's car was the Croydon aggregation, led by the cadet drum and bugle corps of Joseph A. Schumacher Post, V. F. W.; then followed the Croydon Girl Scouts carrying an American flag and their troop flag; girls of Croydon wearing Indian style hats of light blue crepe paper with trim of red; the boys wearing red caps with blue visors; Bucks County Rescue Squad juniors and seniors.

At the front of the Edgely contingent were six girls garbed in white, each bearing a large initial, the whole spelling E-D-G-E-L-Y. The girls of this district were dressed in white with blue paper shoulder straps and belts, blue and white paper hats. The neckties worn by the Edgely boys were of blue, and on each hat, of blue and white, was a white feather.

The six wards of Bristol followed in order. The shoulder straps of first ward girls were in red, as were also those of the boys. A number of the little men rode bicycles, which were gaily decorated.

St. Francis Band followed, being accompanied by a uniformed military unit.

The second ward girls looked attractive in white polo shirts with red neckerchiefs, and red hair-ribbons. The boys wore shoulder straps of the national colors, and Uncle Sam hats.

For the third ward girls, cardboard hats of various hues were provided. The girls' shoulder straps were of red, white and blue; and the boys wore red hats and red shoulder straps and belts.

DRIVE CAREFULLY

Automobile accidents are increasing. Always they increase at this time of year. That sad fact counteracts much of the joy of spring.

What are the reasons? As the weather improves and soft air and returning sunshine and lengthening days invite people into the open, more cars are on the streets; more people are walking; more children are playing.

The need for carefulness is greatly increased. At best our traffic conditions are perilous. If everyone exerted the greatest care, accidents still would happen. The human equation proves out a certain number of human errors. Human judgment in emergencies sometimes will fail, and children have not the judgment expected of adults.

Always also there are the selfish individuals who have no sense of values. There are those selfish persons who value their own time and convenience above the rights of others. They are the automobile drivers who think an amber light is a signal to speed and get across ahead of the red. They are the drivers who cut into and out of traffic lines and dash down the line on the left side of the street that they may get off to a fast start when the light changes. They make left turns at full speed and blast their horns to scare pedestrians out of the way. This is an appeal to everyone at this renewing outdoor season. Think! Be more careful!

Nothing can compensate for the ruthless sacrifice of lives.

Slow down! Obey the laws! Be courteous!

Safety will add to the joyousness of spring for everybody.

A KING ERRS

Little King Ananda of Siam has begun badly. He has taken the easy way by using his royal power to have himself released from school examinations. However, that is a habit of kings, and of some other people.

By so doing, they lose touch with their subjects. They get the idea that their kingdoms exist for them, not they for their kingdoms. But they and their flunkies and sycophants are the only ones with that idea. In many cases there is an upheaval, and the king and his retainers and flatterers go out on their ears, or perhaps without their heads.

King Ananda is being badly brought up.

Ferryboat Out of Ice Pack—Heroic Men From Government Tug Rescue Seven of Doron's Nine Passengers—Two Stay With Crew—Craft Reaches Dock, Starts Out Again, Jam Again and Goes Free.

A very interesting clipping from the Philadelphia Record, dated January 8, 1912, has been handed to the writer of this column by Mrs. George M. Vanzant. It tells the graphic story of the ferryboat, William E. Doron, being caught in an ice-jam in the Delaware river.

The clipping reads: "Burlington, N. J., Jan. 8, 1912—With the little ferryboat William E. Doron it was a case of stuck again, out again, safe again within 24 hours. The craft lay all night with two hundred, shivering passengers, a crew of five and a horse, fast in the ice of the Delaware and within a few hundred yards of its slip here. By the heroic work of several brave fellows seven of the nine were gotten off, the others remained till morning. The boat was worked out of the jam and made its slip about noon. The horse was taken off. The Doron started to cut its way back to Bristol. The jam got it again and it looked like another night in the Polar seas. The ice pack was like a Dr. Cook field of exploration. Finally about 8 o'clock the boat was once more freed by a tug and continued its perilous voyage to the far port of Bristol.

There were nine passengers and a crew of five men, including the owner, Captain "Billy" Doron, aboard when the boat left Bristol at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and a half hour later was hard and fast in a six-foot-thick ice pack 300 yards from the slip at Burlington. After repeated efforts to batter a way through the ice jam, until after darkness fell, Captain Doron saw the attempt was useless and told the passengers they would have to remain aboard until daylight.

Begged to Be Taken Off

Among the passengers was Mrs. M. Williams, of Otter street, Bristol, on her way to Burlington to visit relatives. She was the only woman aboard and the men did all in their power to allay her fears and make her comfortable in the little cabin. Mrs. Williams, however, and some of the men passengers begged to be put ashore, and late in the evening Captain Doron got in touch with the crew of the Government tug Humphreys, moored here. James Murphy and Kelly O'Neill, from the tug, launched a small bateau from a nearby shipyard and, pushing the boat ahead of them like a sled, started for the Doron. They had gone a bare hundred yards from shore when the boat with both men broke through the thin, snow-covered ice around an air hole. Murphy and O'Neill went under, but managed to get a grip on the gunwale of the bateau.

Piney Fellows Nearly Froze

Cries of the struggling men were heard by Carl Wingert and Charles Brisbane, their companions on the tug, but before the latter could locate them in the darkness, Murphy had managed to crawl out on firm ice and later dragged his companion to safety beside him. Their companions helped them back to the Humphreys, their clothing freezing stiff in a temperature of five above zero before they had walked half the distance.

Murphy and O'Neill refused to give up the attempt to reach the Doron, and after taking stimulants and a rubdown, dressed in warm clothes and again set off across the ice with the bateau. Murphy made light of the fact that the city was lauding them as heroes when he told of their experience. He said: "When the ice broke and we went down we thought it was all up for us, as the tide immediately drove the broken cakes against us and pushed us under the main pack. Luckily we managed to keep hold of the little boat, and after working it across the hole managed to lift ourselves out on firm ice. We didn't mind the bath a bit after getting into warm, dry clothes, but you can bet we were careful on our next trip.

"Well, we finally reached the Doron. Some Italians aboard wanted to come ashore on the first trip, and we had to fight them off, as we went out especially to help the woman. We finally took her and one man aboard and started back for the shore. Twice we got on thin ice, but felt it crackling and reached the firmer surface before it broke through. The rough going over the ice hummocks, in some places over two feet high, nearly jolted the passengers from the bateau, but we had to hurry. Well, we reached the side of the tug all right and landed them and then decided we might as well take off the rest of the passengers, as we knew we could now avoid the weak spots and pick a fairly safe course to the Doron."

The six men taken off by the tug's crew refused to give their names. Five of them, Italians, thought they saw a chance for a big damage suit, but the fifth, as he left, jokingly offered to pay Captain Doron extra for a night's lodging.

John Lynn and John McDonald, in charge of a grocery team of the Thomas Sheppard Company, Philadelphia, decided to remain aboard with the crew until morning. The horse was stable in the men's cabin to keep it from freezing to death. Besides Captain "Billy," the members of the Doron's crew were Michael Motz, engineer; Harry Chisholm, mate; R. P. Jackson, purser; Frank Archer, deck-hand.

Saw Way Through

Captain Doron employed a novel method in liberating his boat and getting it into the dock this morning. Shortly before noon his crew and men from the Government boats sawed into the heavy floe in front of the boat for a distance of 150 feet. In this space the Doron was able to gain headway, so that with considerable backing and battering of the ice she finally wedged her way into the dock.

Captain Doron said this morning that it was his second but worst experience in a freeze-up in mid-river. He declared he would make an effort to reach Bristol this afternoon and would then dock his boat for the winter, or at least until the ice jam broke, and this he did. Captain "Billy" told passengers who wanted to go to Bristol that they would take the trip at their own risk. Eight men decided to take the chance, and at the last minute a team-driver whipped up his horses and drove aboard.

So solid is the ice pack that men could run along the edge of the channel, just wide enough for the passage of the boat, and touch her sides as she slowly moved toward mid-stream. Almost in mid-river the Doron hit a pack, thicker than the rest, and the bow turned her bow down river, wedging her crosswise in the small channel she had opened. There she stuck, while some of the bolder passengers left the boat and returned over the ice to Burlington.

Murderesses Have Choice Of Work in Prison Now

nized, Josephine Valenti, who gained prominence in Los Angeles when she was convicted of burning her small baby to death, is captain of one team and Pauline Walker, a colored girl, is captain of the second team.

They play every Sunday, with all of the inmates gradually doing their own work and making a real diamond.

They have made their own uniforms—white blouses and black bloomers with red stripes down the sides, and "I think it is ridiculous," said Marjorie Clarken contemptuously. "How do you expect to catch the men who killed poor Mrs. Elderbank if you waste time on this silly business?"

Montigny did not tell her how. He merely smiled at her benevolently.

June Kirkman also was indignant, but the paring was prepared for with swift efficiency. Inspector McEniry telephoned the manager of a Fifth Avenue apartment hotel not far distant to send him a manicurist with full equipment, preferably a secretive brunette who would not talk.

The young lady who presently arrived proved to be a blonde and inclined to volubility but did her work noon, however. A council of war was going on in his living-room, and it did not cease when the Inspector and Montigny were ushered in.

Jimmy's wife, Douglas Coultnay, Fritz Runkel and Marjorie Clarken were parties to the spirited conference.

"But I'll handle it myself," Marjorie was asserting. "Dad will see that he gets out. There's no need in you people getting disturbed over it. They can't hold him an hour longer—you just wait and see."

"We had been planning," explained Jimmy Kirkman to the Inspector, "to swoop down on the District Attorney in force, to see if we couldn't do something about bail for Glenn Thurber. It's a shame the way they're treating that boy, in-

"THE COLD FINGER CURSE"

by EDWIN DIAL TORGERSON

CHAPTER XXIII

The strips of adhesive tape had not yet been removed to headquarters, though samples had been cut off for the guidance of detectives who were trying to trace it to its source.

Inspector McEniry examined the marks to which Montigny referred. "But that doesn't get us anywhere either," he observed, without enthusiasm. "This Thurber is a pretty slick bird, I'll say that—if Thurber's the man."

"We cannot as yet be very personal with our suspects. Yet I wonder if they all, as a favor to me, would permit themselves to be manicured?"

"Mame!" The Inspector guffawed. "Now, say, Montigny, you're carrying me too fast. We might as well get germs of halitosis and try to match 'em with somebody's breath!"

"The finger-nails, Inspector," said Montigny amiably, "often retain damaging evidence—particularly if the evidence is soapy or greasy. Or sooty. Suppose we should find that a small quantity of a very rare soap—and 'Fallet' is, I think, a rare and expensive soap—had adhered to the finger-nails of a certain person who ordinarily did not have access to it?"

McEniry looked at him soberly, then nodded. "Right again, Captain. It's worth trying. Sure, we'll trim up Thurber and Duane for you. Merriam, too, for that matter."

"Mr. Merriam," observed Montigny, "has had his manicure this morning. We are too late, with him; I noticed his shining nails when we saw him at headquarters. Perhaps we are too late with all of them. But one gentleman interests me particularly, one whom you have not taken in custody."

"Who is that?" asked McEniry quickly. "The artist who went next door to get his pictures last night just prior to the time this murder was committed. What is his name?—Valcour?"

McEniry frowned. "Valcour? Oh, yes, I know who you mean. We're watching him, all right. He had the opportunity as much as Thurber did, almost, to get in on this. But Darden didn't seem to think he was the type. They had him down to headquarters in the line-up last week, but it was a false alarm—he wasn't the man."

"Suspected of what, Inspector?" "Oh, the boys had an idea he was connected with the theft of some valuable paintings from the Henderson Galleries, up on Park Avenue, a while back. He was present there the day the theft occurred, and was seen leaving with some of his own paintings, as it turned out, that he had gone there to sell. But he wasn't in on it at all. They've cleared it up, now, and got back the paintings—one of the private policemen there had turned crook and swiped 'em."

"Ah! Interesting, this artistic atmosphere, Inspector. I should like to know more of this Mr. Valcour—with your permission I should like to have his finger-nails examined."

"Sure. We'll go next door right now, if you like."

"And would you also have traced for me, Inspector, the name of the manufacturer of Fallet toilet soap? I think it is of Marseilles manufacture, or perhaps made in this country with the French formula."

"Yep. We'll check that right away."

"And has your Captain Nobley among his equipment an ultraviolet lamp and filter?" "If he hasn't one he can get it in a hurry. I think he has used one. Captain. What do you need that for?"

"It may be useful in detecting the presence of our soap and cleansing cream. Could he bring the equipment here, with his microscopes, or shall we go to his laboratory?"

"Here," decided McEniry. "I'll get him to bring the outfit right up here. I'll phone him now."

While they waited for Captain Nobley they paid a call next door. They were admitted by Jimmy Kirkman, who was nearly always to be found at home because he had his studio there.

Jimmy was not at work this afterspector, Mr. Coultnay and I will go bond for him, if they'll just be fair and fix a reasonable bail."

"My father will do it," insisted Marjorie Clarken. "He already has said he would."

McEniry looked over the gathering shrewdly. "Hm! Quite a popular fellow; this Glenn Thurber, isn't he? You don't believe he is guilty, eh?"

"We know he is not guilty," said Douglas Coultnay shortly, "and Miss Clarken and I are going to see that he is given his freedom at once."

"Yeah? Murder is not a bailable offense, my friends. I'm afraid you'll be wasting your time. We are looking for a Mr. Valcour, among others. Around here somewhere, is he?"

"Downstairs in his studio," said Jimmy with a start. "Good Lord, is he—"

"Don't get excited," advised the Inspector good-humoredly. "Just call him up here. I want all of you to meet my friend Captain Montigny of Montreal. He is a specialist in many things. He wants to treat you all to a free, extra-close manicure."

Montigny subjected only the men of Two-Sixty-Eight Waverley Place to his finger-nail test. He observed that ladies were forever manicuring themselves anyhow, and did not need it. Inspector McEniry made it plain that he was applying no compulsion—if anyone objected he was excused. But none of the men objected, only the women voicing protest.

well, though she was outraged by the instructions she received to use no implement but her scissors, to pare her victims too closely for comfort, and to apply no polish or other substance until the specimen clippings had been carefully filed away. This Montigny did, in envelopes which he methodically labeled.

The men took it all as a lark.

"I had not expected," said Jimmy Kirkman in mock rue, "to be caught thus red-handed—red-finger-nailed, at any rate. You'll find a little blue pigment, too. Is this a free country, Inspector—I ask you!"

"Whither are we drifting?" demanded Fritz Runkel, who had been striving all day to overcome the effect of too ardent beverages the night before by applying more of the same internally. "Do we dwell in a real or a fancied security? Shall we suffer this grossly paternalistic trend of an autocratic government to proceed unchecked? Ouch, lady! The next thing we know they'll be throwing us down and shaving us—whether we need it or not."

Fritz usually looked like an Air-dale.

"Be a good boy, now," coaxed the Inspector genially, "and we'll let you off without washing your ears. All right. You're next, Mr. Coultnay."

"I trust," said Coultnay, "it will be generally observed that I am not greatly in need of this."

HOLLYWOOD—Realism reached an unexpected peak in Cecil B. De Mille's siege of Acre when 16 extras and the director himself received minor injuries on the last night of the battle scenes.

De Mille narrowly escaped a serious hurt. A blunted arrow struck him a glancing blow on the cheek.

The director and a camera crew were ensconced behind a six-foot square wooden shield while archers fired volleys of arrows directly towards them. Their protection was sufficient, but, in the excitement, De Mille stuck his head around the side of the shield to get a better view of the action.

With a thud, the arrow found its mark.

Aside from a painful swelling, the director suffered no ill results, but had the shaft been aimed a few inches higher he might have lost an eye.

Of the other casualties, nine Crusaders were treated for sprains or bruises. The rest either jumped or were shoved into the artificial moat when fire-balls ignited their clothing.

A most embarrassing experience befell Dick English, Rudy Vallee's personal representative. In Santa Monica, Dick inadvertently drove through a red traffic signal. He saw it too late and tried to stop but an officer already had signaled him to the curb. To Dick's horror, he suddenly remembered his only means of identification were papers linking his name with Vallee's. And Fay Webb's papa is chief of police of Santa Monica.

Fortunately, the cop had a sense of humor. He looked at the papers, had a good laugh and sent Dick on without a ticket.

In Costa Rica, Roberto Castro operates an amateur short wave radio station. The other night, he was chatting across thousands of miles with Paul Potter, a local amateur.

"Come up to Hollywood some time," invited Potter.

"If I ever do it will be just to see Bing Crosby," replied Castro. "I have every one of his records and I sometimes put on a Crosby program over my short wave station."

Potter told the story to Hollywood's favorite crooner, and several nights ago, Bing gave the young Costa Rican the thrill of a life-time by talking to him directly over the ether.

Ketti Gallian is Vince Barnett's latest victim and, from all accounts, she did a classic burn. The rib took place at the Santa Anita race track where a Fox troupe was on location for "Under a Pampas Moon." Posing as a Frenchman, Vince tried to sell the Parisian actress a car. When she finally grew vehement in refusal, he shouted:

"Why don't you stop trying to imitate my French accent? That's the trouble with you American actresses! You're always pretending!"

Timely intervention by Director James Tinling prevented an explosion.

What young leading man, who is quite a Hollywood playboy, was issuing challenges to a duel the other night in a Wilshire boulevard restaurant? But he quieted down when his opponent suggested stepping out in the parking lot and settling it with fists.

"It takes so much time! I start out and look and look and look . . . and by the time I've found what I want I'm dead on my feet. All in, my dear. I mean I actually am!"

those who were accused of having participated in damaging it were sent to court.

Those held were: Robert Gulick, Robert Souder, Harvey Lewis, Richard Heyder, Edward VanCott, William Busch, James Scheetz, Norman Nuss, Carl Lewis, Fred Barnes, Clarence Phillips, Joseph Kramer, George Sine, Winfield Slotter, William Vibbert and Robert Busch. All range from 14 to 16 years.

Hendricks at the hearing related the damage before an audience of 100 persons. He said that 200 electric lights had been broken, a $1400 electric piano had been pulled apart, mirrors broken, statuettes in a sunken aquarium smashed, an $800 century plant had been pulled to pieces, small items had been stolen, clothing knotted and strewn about the house, and valuable bonds destroyed in the ransacking of his office, in addition to many other depredations.

As in previous hearings, when the boys were called upon, no intimation of who did the serious damage could be obtained. Many of the boys admitted minor vandalism, such as breaking electric light bulbs, and others admitted doing "a little" drinking, but none conceded he had touched the piano, plant of any other especially valuable object.

One boy even insisted that all he had done in the house was to turn off an electric light on the second floor, which he had found burning, in order to protect the owner of the empty house from further current loss.

Admissions and testimony against others, by the various defendants, however, resulted in tying up 19 of the boys with depredations, and 16 of these were held.

The other three were unable to be present at the hearing, although they were involved, according to the magistrate. They will be given hearings later, and their cases will be disposed of in the same manner, Magistrate Sprekel announced.

The other boys are: William Conrad, George Ruch and Earl Bader.

MONONGAHELA — (INS) — Skeletons of 21 Indians interred in a single pit were found recently by George S. Fisher, Findleyville archaeologist.

Fisher's find in Allegheny County, near Washington County line, included a nine-foot string of beads rivaling that unearthed in 1908 near Athens, O., by two archaeologists.

Fashioned out of rabbit, turkey and pheasant bones, and treated with fire to produce a high polish, the beads, coiled about the waist of a skeleton, served as a belt, Fisher believes.

An ear bangle carved from a human tooth, another from a fox tooth—used as ear bobs—and a pipe stem of cat-lintite also were unearthed from the pit. Fisher explained catlintite is ideal pipe stem material because of its flexibility.

INDIANA — (INS) — A site has been selected at nearby Gaibleton for the Civilian Conservation Corps camp that has been assigned to soil erosion work on the Crooked Creek watershed.

The camp will be located on an eight-acre tract of land just off a "Pinchot" road about 10 miles from here and is centrally situated for the erosion control work that is to be done.

Members of the corps to be sent here will number approximately 235.

BEHIND the SCENES in HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL

HOLLYWOOD—Hollywoodites are amused by the cross country acidities between Wendy Barrie and Dorothy Fell, the heiress. As you probably read in the news accounts, Wendy led off by saying that Woolworth Donohue, wealthy young socialite, had called her from Palm Beach to announce his engagement to Miss Fell. And then, the heiress was quoted as saying she had no intention of marrying Donohue and, if he made any such call to Wendy Barrie, it must have been to stop her from telling people that she (Wendy) was engaged to Donohue.

To which the British actress replied:

"I am genuinely sorry for her that she has no intention of marrying Mr. Donohue. He is an excellent young man and very desirable. I am sure Miss Fell could do no better." Filmland is wondering whether this will be the last word.

Sunken treasure!

The lure of it will take Preston Foster, Hollywood actor, to Mexican waters as soon as he finishes "The Peacemaker" at R-K-O.

Foster says he got the tip on the treasure on a trip south last year. It isn't a Captain Kidd's fortune, only several thousand dollars in silver, but, if the star's information is true, it lies in a sunken vessel at a not too inaccessible spot on the ocean bottom near Ensenada.

At least it must be close to that port, for Foster admits his quest will take him on a three-day voyage from Los Angeles harbor.

The actor will be accompanied on the adventure by several friends. They now have his boat in drydock being overhauled and are taking on grappling hooks and diving equipment to effect the salvage.

Studio and family objections may win out after all and prevent Bing Crosby from attending the Kentucky Derby. The star's folk are urging him not to fly—the only way he would be able to see the classic race and return to Hollywood or Chicago in time to put on his scheduled radio broadcast.

Bing himself isn't so keen as some stars on flying.

He has done none, in fact, since Knute Rockne was killed in an air crash.

Marlene Dietrich's trip across the country was the first time she had traveled alone, and the star was quite flurried about it. She never left her compartment from the time the train left Chicago until within a few minutes of her arrival in Los Angeles. Getting off the train, she left a case, containing all her jewelry, in the compartment, and had to make a quick trip to retrieve it. She even had to ask how much to tip the porter.

And was it in the news accounts that her husband, Rudy Sieber, is on his way to Germany?

What young leading man is plenty burned up at his studio? Another company has been giving him fine roles and wants to feature him in roles and wants to feature him in one of the big stars of the industry, but has refused to build him any further unless he can obtain his release from his current obligations?

HOLLYWOOD TICKER-TAPE—

That expected film colony divorce will be filed as soon as a property settlement is effected. . . . Rudy Vallee has sold his lodge in Maine and Hollywood expects him to make his home on the coast—that is if the stiff income tax measure doesn't go through. . . . Joe E. Brown flew to San Francisco to consult a specialist about the back injury he suffered the other day in a scuffle on the "Alibi Ike" set. . . . Merle Oberon, one of the current raves, was at the Trocadero with David Nevins. . . . Ernst Lubitsch at the same spot forgetting his producer problems. With him, of course, Katherine Ardell. . . . Johnny Downs and Director Elliott Nugent jumped just in time to escape having a beam fall on them on the "College Scandal" set the other day. . . . And big times were had at the recent cocktail party thrown by Billy Seymours and Bert Friedlob.

TWILIGHT LEAGUE TO OPEN SEASON TONIGHT

With two games being scheduled, the Bristol Twilight League will get under way tonight. On Leedom's field, the Tullytown A. A. club will cross bats with the Bristol Casseys, while the 1935 Hibernian team will make its debut at Edgely against the Edgely Braves.

Tullytown and the Bristol Casseys are new-comers in the circuit. The Casseys are being managed by "Eddie" McDavitt, who also is a player. They have several new faces in the line-up and are anxious to get off on the right footing. Tullytown will have a team composed of players from that borough.

The Edgely club has replaced the Independents in the circuit and will have most of the players from last season's Edgely team. That is, the players who could not make the grade since the Edgelyites advanced themselves to faster leagues. Marty Fallon is manager of the Hibernians.

Going into that final stanza, the Hibs possessed a 7-5 lead. Bilger, first batter rolled one down to "Bill" Dougherty who misjudged. Devlin became wild and passed both Downing and Watson. Comly tapped weakly to J. Roe but Bilger was off a flying start and crossed the plate while Roe was tossing out the runner. The stage was then set for the Black act. On Devlin's second pitch he slugged a double to right, scoring the two basemen and winning the contest.

HIGH SCHOOL RELAY TEAM WINS 3RD PLACE IN MEET

(By Jack Orr)

Bristol High's crack relay team captured a third place in the high school mile relay championship in the 41st annual Penn Relay carnival held at Franklin Field on Saturday.

The Cardinal and Gray representatives, Neindorff, Hetherington, Evans, and Fagan, each received a bronze medal symbolic of third place in this event. The trophy exhibits Benjamin Franklin seated in the Chair of Judgment presenting four relay men with olive wreaths, the token of victory.

The field of 13 starters included: Norcom (Va.), Perth Amboy, Hamburg, Langhorne, Birdsboro, Toms River, Bridgeport, Hershey, Morrisville, Bristol, Olney, Princeton and Monticello. "Hank Neindorff led off for the Bristol lads and held third spot all the way. Wally Bernard, Princeton High representative, led the pack to the passing zone.

Irv Hetherington ran in the second position for Bristol and held this spot as did Jack Evans running in third spot but in passing to Walt Fagan a mix-up occurred and Fagan started the final quarter in fourth position.

Fagan followed Eisenhower of Hershey high school all the way to the home stretch and Walt started his sprint. As he was about to pass Eisenhower, the Hershey lad jabbed Fagan with his elbow and was thereby disqualified.

Princeton High, composed entirely of colored lads, were far ahead of the rest of the field and were considered one of the best high school teams in competition.

Norcom High, of Virginia, won the second "money" and Langhorne finished fourth.

Morrisville, Bristol's greatest rival in any sport, minus the ace, Russ Malmbsbury, finished well out of the running.

The time was second only to West Catholic's record-breaking run. The exact figures read: 3:29.9, which surpasses any past time of the Bristol squad.

"DOC" MACKENZIE WINS THRILLING RACE, READING

"Doc" Mackenzie, of Eddington, triumphed over a classy field at Reading yesterday when he took the honors in the sensational automobile race on the Reading speedway.

Taking the lead as the drivers shot away at the drop of the flag, Mackenzie, by heady, clever driving, set a nerve-racking pace until the 19th lap, when Milt Marion and Johnny Concannon came together on the backstretch. It was at the same spot where this pair crashed last year, and today Marion, the Brooklyn driver, was sent to the hospital. Concannon was forced to withdraw due to a broken wheel. The 20 laps were clocked at 9:34 2-5, fast time when considering one lap was driven under caution.

Resuming speed on the 23rd lap, Mackenzie, with Bob Sall, who made desperate attempts to pass the leader, and Billy Winn raced hard to furnish nerve-tugging thrills for the record crowd.

But it was Mackenzie's day and the Eddington ace took the honors by less than two car lengths from Bobby Sall, with Billy Winn a close third, beating out Johnny Duncan, the Long Island driver. The time of the 30 laps was 15:47 4-5.

Riding to a record, Bobby Sall, the Princeton (N. J.) auto race driver, turned the half mile track in 27 4-5 to win the qualifying time trials. The previous mark of 28 seconds was held jointly by Johnny Hannon, the 1934 Eastern dirt track champion; Billy Winn, the Kansas City ace, and Sall.

Pennant Next Stop?

By BURNLEY

Cleveland's bat-brandishing redskins are determined to massacre all opposition in the current American League pennant battle, and according to expert opinion, all the Indians need to accomplish this little feat is just a fair share of the breaks.

Sir Walter Johnson, famed "Big Train" of pitching history, must deliver a pennant for Billy Evans this time or he will get the well-known heave. There are those who say that Cleveland would have finished on top last year if a more inspiring leader than the quiet, even-tempered Swede had been at the helm, but, of course, this is more conjecture by the second-guessers.

It is true that Big Barney is not the fiery, dynamic pilot of the Frisch and Cochrane brand, but after all, Miller Huggins proved that a colorless, unassuming type of leader can also reach the peaks of managerial success if he has baseball brains.

His players like Johnson, and would undoubtedly rather work under a kindly boss like the "Big Train" than to be constantly harried by a "driver" of the McGraw school, but up to now Sir Walter's efforts have achieved nothing remarkable in the way of results. This year he is on the spot, and he knows it.

A severe blow to the Indians' chances of getting off to a flying start was the illness of Bill Knickerbocker and Al Milnar, both of whom were stricken with appendicitis before the season started. Knickerbocker is one of the greatest young shortstops in baseball, a .317 hitter last season, and a peppy player who bolsters the team's moral when he's in there. His illness means that Bill may not be of much use to Johnson's tribe during the first half of the season.

On the other hand, those who play hunches and profess to believe in signs and omens, take the incapacitation of Knickerbocker as a sure augury of a pennant for the Indians, since it was after the tragic accident to Ray Chapman, then Cleveland's star shortstop, that the Tribe won the flag in 1920.

With such power hitters as Vosmik, Averill, Campbell, and Trosky, and with a highly efficient twirling corps, headed by Harder and Hudlin, the Big Train's crew may reach its pennant destination in spite of Lady Luck's frowns.
